Progress over Perfection

Intermittent Reinforcement & Predictability Cheat-Sheet

WHY UNCERTAINTY HOOKS US — AND HOW TO FIND FREEDOM

A CALMER YOU IS A BRIGHTER TOMORROW

1 The Dopamine Loop

UNCERTAINTY FUELS DESIRE

Uncertainty keeps the brain coming back.

Unpredictable rewards activate the brain's dopamine system, creating a cycle of anticipation, craving and repeated checking — even when the payoff is inconsistent.

2 Recognizing Extinction Bursts

IT OFTEN GETS WORSE BEFORE IT GETS BETTER

When a source of unpredictable reward becomes less available, behaviour can temporarily intensify — a phenomenon known as an extinction burst — before it fades.

More intensity doesn't mean progress.

What it looks like

- More frequent checking or reaching out
- Increased anxiety or obsessive thoughts
- Bigger emotional reactions (e.g. anger, sadness, bargaining)
- A renewed push for attention or reassurance
- Feels worse than before

What it means

- A normal response when unpredictable rewards decrease
- Your brain is resisting the loss of a familiar pattern
- It's a sign the reinforcement is being withdrawn, not a sign to re-engage
- With time and no reinforcement, the behaviour usually fades
- Discomfort is temporary — it won't last

3 5-Step Action Plan for Detachment

SMALL STEPS. BIGGER FREEDOM.

1 Notice

CATCH THE PATTERN

- [ ] See the trigger, urge or thought as it arises.

"Ah, this is the dopamine loop."

2 Delay

CREATE SPACE

- [ ] Pause before responding. Even a few minutes can break the cycle.

"I can wait."

3 Label

NAME WHAT'S HAPPENING

- [ ] Identify it: 'intermittent reinforcement', 'extinction burst', or 'anxiety'.

"This is a learned pattern, not a need."

4 Redirect

DO SOMETHING ELSE

- [ ] Shift your focus to a value-aligned activity (e.g. friend, hobby, movement, creative task).

"I choose what nourishes me."

5 Reframe

CHOOSE A HEALTHIER STORY

- [ ] Remind yourself that peace, consistency and mutual interest are also real and attractive.

"I can have connection without chaos."

A CALMER BRIGHTER YOU

Anxiety vs. Genuine Chemistry

Intensity, uncertainty and nervous activation are not always signs of a healthy connection.
They can be the result of intermittent reinforcement and a dysregulated nervous system.
Calm consistency can also be attraction — and it's often a more reliable foundation for real intimacy.

Peace can be a spark too.
