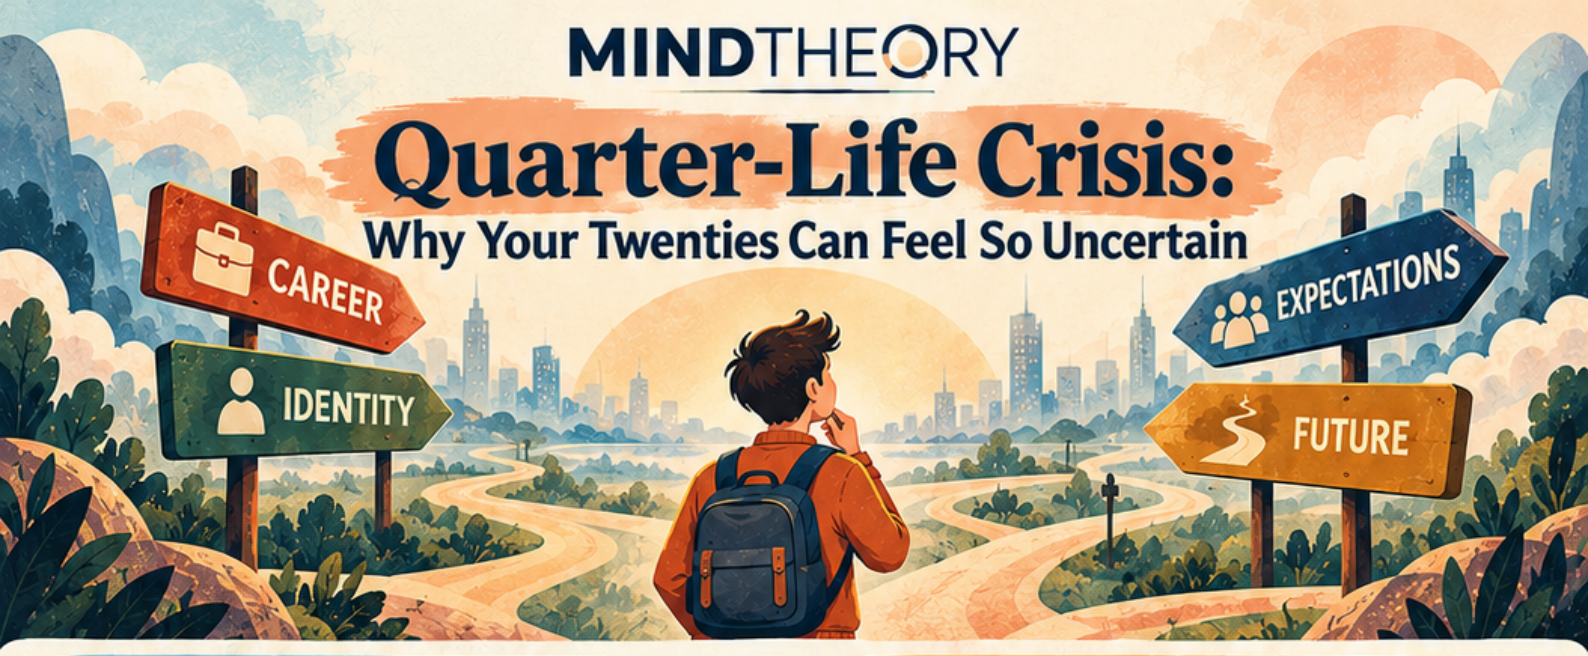
Quarter-Life Crisis:

Why Your Twenties Can Feel So Uncertain



1 What Is It?

Emerging Adulthood

Your twenties are a unique life stage called "emerging adulthood" (roughly ages 18–29). It's a period of exploration, transition and identity-building, where many traditional paths are no longer fixed.

2 The Two Traps

Locked-Out

- Feels stuck and left behind
- Worries about not achieving enough
- Feels inadequate or "not ready"

Locked-In

- Feels trapped in a path that doesn't fit
- Constant pressure to perform
- Fear of making a change

3 Why It Happens

Choice Overload

- Too many career, lifestyle and educational options
- Fear of making the "wrong" choice
- Constantly questioning: "Is this the right path?"

Social Comparison

- Seeing curated success on social media
- Comparing your behind-the-scenes to others' highlight reels
- Feeling like everyone else has it figured out

4 Actionable Steps

1. Values Audit

- Identify what truly matters to you
- Separate your values from external expectations
- Ask: "What kind of life do I actually want?"

2. Micro-Experiments

- Try small, low-risk steps instead of big commitments
- Explore different interests, skills and work options
- Learn through real experience, not just overthinking

3. Social Media Boundaries

- Limit time on platforms that trigger comparison
- Follow accounts that inspire and educate
- Focus on your own progress, not someone else's timeline

4. Celebrate Small Milestones

- Acknowledge your progress, no matter how small
- Be kind to yourself during the process
- Remember: it's a journey, not a race

Key Takeaway

Feeling uncertain in your twenties is not a sign that you're failing — it's a normal and important part of growing up.

Give yourself time, stay curious, and keep moving forward — one step at a time.
